Mr. Schoppaul was a musician. During the American Civil War, music played a prominent role on both sides of the conflict: Union and Confederate.

On the American Civil War battlefield, instruments included: bugles, drums, and fifes.

They were played to issue marching orders or to boost the morale of soldiers. The field music of buglers was not only necessary for the telling of time and duties in camp, but also for communicating orders in the heat of battle. The bugle could often be heard when voice commands were impossible. These buglers were not part of the brass bands that were common at the beginning of the war, but rather musicians who along with fifers and drummers enlisted with a regiment of infantry or cavalry.

Civilian: In South Carolina, he opened a business as a shoe and boot maker

Obituary published in Confederate Veteran, volume 29, page 346

"Adolphus Schoppaul was born in Germany on 11 June 1834 and died at the Confederate Home at Austin, Texas on 13 July 1921. Comrade Schoppaul came to America in 1858 locating at Spartanburg, SC. At the breaking out of the War between the States, he enlisted as a volunteer in May 1861 in Capt H Foster's company Jenkin's Brigade. He fought his first battle at Manassas and was in every other noted battle in Virginia. He served throughout the war and was honorably discharged at the close. Comrade Schoppaul came to Texas in 1880 locating at Bartonville in Denton County in which community he was known as an honorable and upright citizen. Early in 1921 he entered the Confederate Home. In his death a good citizen and friend has passed on a true comrade proud of his record as a Confederate soldier. He was a member of Sul Ross Camp at Denton, Texas. Surviving him are four sons, one daughter, and a host of friends."

[his comrade and friend Marion McCreless]
